The Island

The Way Forward for Sustained Growth

- Presidential address delivered by Prof A.D.V de S Indraratna at the Sri Lanka Economic Association Annual Sessions last week

Tuesday 29th October, 2013

Lanka’s per capita income (measured in constant 2009 prices) has almost doubled during the last ten years, from 2002 to 2012. This is a significant achievement for a small developing country like Sri Lanka, which was until recently considered to be a low-income economy. The country’s economic growth rate has averaged around 7% per annum over the past decade, making it one of the fastest-growing economies in the world. This has led to a significant improvement in living standards, with poverty rates declining sharply and per capita income increasing significantly.

The Island

The Way Forward for Sustained Growth

- Presidential address delivered by Prof A.D.V de S Indraratna at the Sri Lanka Economic Association Annual Sessions last week

Tuesday 29th October, 2013

Lanka’s per capita income (measured in constant 2009 prices) has almost doubled during the last ten years, from 2002 to 2012. This is a significant achievement for a small developing country like Sri Lanka, which was until recently considered to be a low-income economy. The country’s economic growth rate has averaged around 7% per annum over the past decade, making it one of the fastest-growing economies in the world. This has led to a significant improvement in living standards, with poverty rates declining sharply and per capita income increasing significantly.

The Island

The Way Forward for Sustained Growth

- Presidential address delivered by Prof A.D.V de S Indraratna at the Sri Lanka Economic Association Annual Sessions last week

Tuesday 29th October, 2013

Lanka’s per capita income (measured in constant 2009 prices) has almost doubled during the last ten years, from 2002 to 2012. This is a significant achievement for a small developing country like Sri Lanka, which was until recently considered to be a low-income economy. The country’s economic growth rate has averaged around 7% per annum over the past decade, making it one of the fastest-growing economies in the world. This has led to a significant improvement in living standards, with poverty rates declining sharply and per capita income increasing significantly.

The Island

The Way Forward for Sustained Growth

- Presidential address delivered by Prof A.D.V de S Indraratna at the Sri Lanka Economic Association Annual Sessions last week

Tuesday 29th October, 2013

Lanka’s per capita income (measured in constant 2009 prices) has almost doubled during the last ten years, from 2002 to 2012. This is a significant achievement for a small developing country like Sri Lanka, which was until recently considered to be a low-income economy. The country’s economic growth rate has averaged around 7% per annum over the past decade, making it one of the fastest-growing economies in the world. This has led to a significant improvement in living standards, with poverty rates declining sharply and per capita income increasing significantly.

The Island

The Way Forward for Sustained Growth

- Presidential address delivered by Prof A.D.V de S Indraratna at the Sri Lanka Economic Association Annual Sessions last week

Tuesday 29th October, 2013

Lanka’s per capita income (measured in constant 2009 prices) has almost doubled during the last ten years, from 2002 to 2012. This is a significant achievement for a small developing country like Sri Lanka, which was until recently considered to be a low-income economy. The country’s economic growth rate has averaged around 7% per annum over the past decade, making it one of the fastest-growing economies in the world. This has led to a significant improvement in living standards, with poverty rates declining sharply and per capita income increasing significantly.